“ Earl was my boss for many years at the Congressional Budget Office. In fact, he was the first boss of my professional career. He was director of a unit studying federal budgets for personnel and other general government. I learned a lot from Earl about things like attention to detail, double checking work, careful documentation and clear communication. I remember that he met his wife shortly before he retired and that he was the happiest that I had ever seen him. I hope his final years were as happy as I remember him then. Mark M.
