“Brother Luther was a dear friend who came to see our family in Virginia for a week every year to go to our camp meetings. He would always be requested to sing, and "Jesus on the mainline" was his go to special song. By the time he would get done singing, he would be dancing across the platform beating his tambourine, and everybody in the congregation would be on their feet singing and clapping along with him! He'd always end with a heart felt slap of his tambourine across his knee, and a "Well Glory! Amen! Amen! Amen!" I'm sure that he's in heaven now, singing with all the heavenly host today. What a blessing to our family. He's more dear to us than most of our blood relatives!

“ I would like to provide my most sympathetic extension greeting to his family. You have no idea who I am. An old white guy, moved in new to Seaford three plus years ago. No friends, I run into this guy at Walmart. I can talk to a store dummy , let alone a fellow named Luther Travers, who had me beat. I stayed at that store for over an hour listening to his whole hearted love of his God. The joke here is I am a Atheist. I never let him know that since I never wanted to hurt this loving , kind, giving, man, who obviously had a very special bond with his God. Nope not me. Just after I started to meet with him , and low and behold he was a friend of a man who I became a great friend of, who was Kevin the Taxidermist where we would all sit at his shop and solve most of the worlds problems. Him full of his God and a whole lot of common sense. I grew to love him. His kind face I would kiss when I was leaving. He always wanted the hug. I am going to miss him. No doubt in my mind his God has no seat for him in Heaven, he has his own condo. Saints get condo's. Luther, I love ya buddy, Iam going to miss you much. I will never forget you. To the family, you had an ace there, a man of men, a cuddle, a hug, all good was in this man. One in a billion. I put that picture of him and I at Walmart. I could not get it to post straight. For that I am sorry. I am not real computer literate. Peter Creager III
