“ I let his AT&T coworkers know. I'll never forget the iPhone launch and a line that wrapped around the building waiting for that 5pm launch. Doors open and I. Come a flood of people for the first of a new generation of cell phones. Everyone excited and smiling. There was Tommy with the only customer who was there for a problem and a razr. His hands up say “You have to be kidding me!” How long did that person wait in line for just to ruin Tommy's evening. We laughed so hard cause it could only have happened to Tommy.

Later on I walked into the store and said Hi to Tommy as he hopped in his car. Thinking he was off to an early lunch. Little did I know he wasn't returning. No one realized he walked out. Asking the others forgot he had even worked that morning. We hadn't heard from him for years. He mailed his keys and phone to the store and the day he quit went down in the Hurffville book of legends.

Few years ago I reconnected and was able to have him join an online reunion. Was sorry to get the news. Tommy is still a legend!

Condolences to his family.
